10 great things to do in Northwest wine country

The more vintages I put behind me, the more importance I place on quality food and where it comes from.

Perhaps that notion is the byproduct of living in wine country and drinking the fruit of my neighbors' labor.

At the same time, I need to be better about trying to make sure I live long enough to enjoy the bottles I've squirreled away. Something akin to "I work out to eat."

Those who read this presumably enjoy the empty calories that delicious Northwest wines add to our diet. Here are some of summertime touring tips that address adding and removing calories.

7 Sip of Kitsap. The third annual Kitsap Wine Festival is especially appealing to Seattle winesters because there's no need to drive to Bremerton.

Just walk on the ferry. Harborside Fountain Park is a stone's throw from the Bremerton terminal.

The Aug. 20 event features more than 30 wineries from Washington and Oregon, and nearby Anthony's at Sinclair Inlet is among the restaurants participating at this event, which benefits the Harrison Medical Center Foundation. Cost is $60 if you wait to buy at the door. Drift over to kitsapwinefestival.com.
